Building your Keyword Universe Turning Keywords into Website Architecture

estisfaction accounts and the call to action with accounts satisfaction guarantee and the call to action with greater urgency.

An example of the Big Promise sales letter landing page headline

- 1. Headline attention grabber Are you getting your share of the good life?
- 2. Subhead promise You could be getting a lot more of the good life.
- 3. Subhead promise We can show you how to get more of the good life than you ever imagined.
- 4. Subhead fulfillment Here's how to get more of the good life right now guaranteed.
- 5. Subhead call to action Order our product today and get more of the good life than you ever imagined guaranteed.

The Big Promise model has been used successfully since the invention of advertising. It can work very well for persuading lots of customers, but there's an even more effective strategy.

The Anxiety/Relief sales letter landing page copywriting model

In the second sales letter landing page copywriting model, which I call the Anxiety/Relief sales letter:

- (1) The headline grabs the reader's attention by creating anxiety.
- (2) The first subhead provokes additional anxiety.
- (3) The second subhead ratchets up the anxiety.
- (4) The third subhead describes how the anxiety can be relieved by ordering the product, and includes a satisfaction guarantee.
- (5) The fourth subhead, sometimes used in the post script (P.S.), repeats the satisfaction guarantee and the call to action with greater urgency.

Hypothetical example of the Anxiety/Relief sales letter headline and subheads

- 1. Headline attention grabber provokes anxiety You're probably not getting your share of the good life!
- 2. Subhead adds more anxiety And you're a loser, so what little you get of the good life really isn't very good, right?
- 3. Subhead ratchets up the anxiety Wow. vou really are a stinkin' loser, aren't vou? No
